Wrong-Way Driving Is A Majar Hazard

Wrong-way driving on interstate and divided highways is a major, sometimes fatal hazard, but Virginia's Department of Highways and Transportation is making it more difficult for such incidents to occur.

J. P. Mills, Jr., the department's traffic and safety engineer, said the number of reported incidents declined from 107 in the six months between December 1, 1971 and May 31, 1972, soon after the problem became evident, to 55 in the same period in 1977-78.

"Driving in the wrong direction, especially on the interstate highways, is a very serious and very dangerous problem, often resulting in head-on collisions," Mills said.

Informaiton on the problem made available through the departmentwide efforts with the Virginia State Police has disclosed certain facts. Of the 55 reported incidents during the 1977-78 period, 29 or 53 per cent were involved in accidents. Twenty-four vehicles entered highways the wrong way at interchanges or intersections. Twenty-seven or 40 per cent of the drivers had been drinking or were drunk. Restricted light conditions were present in 37 incidents.

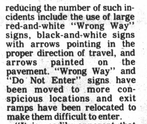
Mills said new traffic engineering procedures, police enforcement, educaitonal efforts and the use of Citizens Band (CB) radio have helped make motorists aware of the danger and have reduced the number of wrong-way driving incidents.

"The use of CB radio has been very helpful in stopping some of these drivers ," he said. "A motorist or truck driver will see someone headed the wrong way and will notify the police to stop the driver before an accident occurs."

State trooeprs report when they observe a wrong-way driver or investigate an accident resulting from such driving.

Other factors attributed to reducing the number of such incidents include the use of large red-and-white "Wrong Way" signs, black-and-white signs with arrows pointing in the proper direction of travel, and arrows painted on the pavement. "Wrong Way" and "Do Not Enter" signs have been moved to more conspicious locations and exit ramps have been relocated to make them difficult to enter.

"It is readily apparent that real danger continues to exist because of the wrong-way driver," Mills said, "but we are doing everything we can to reduce such incidents."



Artichokes have a nutty flavor and cause any food or drink taken afterwards to taste sweet.

Turbine Ventilators get rid of hot attic air and save energy and dollars.
